RE: Lynn Fundingsland's Donation

Lynn Fundingsland would like to donate one of his photographs, which were showcased in the 2016 City Hall Curating Exhibit, to the City of Fargo. Lynn Fundingsland is a photographer whose early experiences as a city planner may have led to his interest in exploring the built environment through the lens of a camera. He often captures buildings and architectural details that we recognize but can't quite place. This ability to capture the familiar in an unfamiliar way is extremely intriguing. He also draws inspiration from nature, in particular the gentle landscape to be found along the Red River.

Included are five options for the Arts and Cultures consideration for acquisition from Tania Blanich.

City of Fargo Public Art Master Plan

Table of Contents

Draft 11.14.16

TOC Page

Acknowledgments (who helped make the plan)

Letter from Mayor (and Chair of ACC?)

Executive Summary (note: Much of this section’s content will be moved or expanded upon in main document)

- The field of public art today
 - What is public art? (more than murals, monuments and memorials)
 - Expansion of the field, with more emphasis on audience participation, co-creation, cross sector collaborations and engaging people in the process
 - Beyond visual forms, with performance, events, spectacles, and temporary demonstration projects
 - Public art in support of placemaking, place-keeping and social cohesion
 - Meaningful, outcome-oriented art, in which the content is informed by the context of its location and audiences
 - Functional art, such as street furniture, railings, bike racks
 - Artists addressing social and environmental issues
 - Public art programs are being revamped—beyond traditional percent-for-art funding model—to support temporary projects and creative work that connects economic development with community cultural development
 - Traditional top-down approach is being combined with bottom up, grass roots methods, fostering entrepreneurs and private sector producers
 - A growing number of traditional arts institutions, seeking to become less exclusive and more relevant in today’s culture, are taking cues from the public art “playbook” (taking art or performances to the audience, for example)
 - New technologies, educational programs, funding initiatives, and mobile apps that tell the story of the art on site
- Why create a plan?
 - Fargo citizens identified public art as a priority in GO-2030 Plan
 - ACC established to set stage for City’s expanded, facilitative role in arts development; plan enables ACC to take it to the next level.

 - To leverage support and participation, public-private partnerships and community buy-in.
 - To insure potential of public art—in all its forms—is maximized to serve goals of the City and needs of the community.

- NOTE: Public art is a vibrant, growing part of any arts and culture ecosystem. This plan is not meant to address the much larger arts and cultural development topics in Fargo, such as arts and entertainment facilities, the symphony, non-profit arts organizations' operating support, artist live-work space, arts education, creative economy development, etc. This plan—and its focus on public art—seeks to serve as a valuable stepping stone and learning opportunity toward the development of a larger arts and cultural master plan for Fargo, and a broader role for the City's Arts and Culture Commission (ACC).

About Public Art

- What is Public Art?
 - For the purposes of the public art plan, public art is defined as works of art that are free and accessible to the public, including visual art, dance, festivals, music, theatre, literature, and photography. Public art can be permanent or temporary. It is a multifaceted, multi-disciplinary field of inquiry in which artists explore, experiment and create projects—often in collaboration with other disciplines and sectors—in spaces freely accessible to, and used by the public. Public art today goes beyond murals, monuments and memorials. It has moved beyond permanence and solidity, seeking to engage the community in a manner that, while not excluding the methods of the past, brings them to life as a part of the community. What distinguishes public art is the unique association of how it is made, where it is, and what it means. Public art can express community values, enhance our environment, transform a landscape, heighten our awareness, or question our assumptions. Placed in public or publicly accessible sites, this art is there for everyone, a form of collective community expression. Public art is a reflection of how we see the world – the artist’s response to our time and place combined with our own sense of who we are. Integrating public art in all aspects of city building and public life cultivation can provide many benefits. In short, public art creates a culturally stimulating environment, offers a creative outlet for artists of all kinds, attracts people and is accessible to all.
- Distinguish between “public art” and “art in public” (art that may be indifferent to its setting)
- Reference graphic showing the many form that public art can take
 - Provide visual illustrations
 - Local, regional and national examples
- Characteristics of the field & Rationale for Supporting Public Art:
 - Public art is the outward expression of the city’s identity and character, reflecting its vibrancy and energy
 - Art contributes to a sense of place and adds value to the built environment and our quality of life
 - A professional practice, a field of inquiry, and exploration of the public sphere by artists, often working in collaboration with multiple sectors
 - Public art promotes inclusiveness, creates a pride of place and care for the environment. It contributes to the health of citizens.
 - Public art creates a culturally stimulating environment, offers a creative outlet for artists of all kinds, attracts people and is accessible to all.
 - Public art contributes to economical vitality by helping attract and retain professionals, including the creative class, aesthetically enhancing the public realm and strengthening social cohesion.

- The practice of public art has changed significantly since the first municipal public art program was established in Philadelphia more than fifty years ago. The field is rapidly moving beyond the dominant percent-for-art model, whereby a percent of the city's capital budget is reserved for commissioning art. The range of commissioning entities for public art have expanded beyond public agencies to include museums, galleries, universities, independent arts organizations, community development organizations and business improvement districts. Indeed, artists are self-funding projects via social media technology and grants. With these changes, the types of public art programs being developed in America have evolved to embrace the various ways public art projects are being initiated, and the ways communities seek to engage art and artists to improve livability, add vibrancy, and address the health of people and the planet. Today there are approximately 350 programs in the US utilizing the percent-for-art model.

Why have a Public Art Program?

- The development and adoption of a public art plan provides an opportunity to establish a shared vision for a community's public realm and to coordinate the activities of multiple stakeholders—planners, artists, arts and culture-related nonprofit organizations, and other stakeholders—in shaping that realm. More and more communities are developing and adopting public art master plans for the purpose of demonstrating a long-term commitment to the central importance of public art in the planning, design, and creation of public space.
- Fargo citizens identified public art as a priority in GO-2030 Plan
- ACC established to set stage for City's expanded, facilitative role in arts development; plan enables ACC to take it to the next level
- To establish policies and procedures supportive of artists and the integration of art and artists in all aspects of Fargo's development
- To insure long-term, sustainable support for public art in Fargo
- To leverage participation, public-private partnerships and community buy-in
- To solidify role of art in the city, and maximize the potential of public art—in all its forms, to:
 - address goals of the City and needs of the community
 - serve as a catalyst, leveraging additional support
 - act as a seed for growing more art
 - address goals of city and needs of communities
- To articulate vision of what public art can be, and formalize policies, processes, public will and private investment
- To streamline process for getting art made, including the permitting process
- Insures there are methods for evaluating success of the program, distilling intention and assessing impact
- To make Fargo a better city, a more competitive cultural hub, and a city that is recognized nationally as valuing the arts
- Make sure art is a staple, a basic component of everyday life

- Advocate for the importance of public art
- Maintain collection
- Insure that an educational component is included

Vision, Mission and Goals for Fargo Public Art Program

- Vision Statement
 - The City of Fargo envisions a livable, pedestrian-friendly community where integrating public art into city initiatives, neighborhood revitalization efforts and private developments is a norm; where every citizen, worker and visitor in Fargo has the opportunity to freely experience quality art and creative expression as part of their daily lives; where creativity and participation in city building is nurtured at every age level and artists are valued as contributors to the quality of life enjoyed in Fargo.

- Public art can be a catalyst for expansive thinking, cultural evolution, social openness and cohesion. The robust Public Art Program envisioned by this Master Plan is meant to benefit Fargo area artists, residents, and visitors. It's designed to support the creation and exhibition of new works in a wide variety of media—art designed to serve a broad and increasingly diverse audience. The program also seeks to bring creative, innovative thinking to help shape the future of Fargo, connecting the talents and energies of Fargo's growing artist community with the needs and opportunities of the city. We envision artists engaging with virtually every sector—designers and developers, gardeners and educators, social service providers and health care workers, business owners and manufacturers, nature lovers and tourists, civic boosters and sports enthusiasts, along with many, many others.
- This plan recognizes that public art is both a product and a process. Fargo's public art program values both. It includes a commissioning program—insuring high quality art is integrated into public and private improvement projects—and a robust educational program that support artists' career development. An important value of the program is to treat the field of public art like any other jobs creation program by supporting the needs of artists to build careers as professionals, and increase their capacity to creatively and effectively serve the needs of communities throughout the city.
- This plan is designed as an educational resource, a road map, and a tool to guide the development of Fargo's Public Art Program. A special section, called Public Art Possibilities, is included in the Appendix to illustrate some of the many ways that local artists can contribute their creativity to Fargo and benefit the community's cultural and economic health.

 - Forecast considered Fargo as a whole city, consisting of six districts. Breaking the city into these districts allows for a public art strategy that fosters development of distinct characteristics and identities of Fargo’s physical and cultural landscape. It also enables the development of Small Area Plans, empowering residents and businesses in Fargo to transform public space through artist-led practices. An example where this has proven effect is The Fargo Project. The creation of six unique city districts also insures that Fargo’s public art program is citywide, and not just focused on the downtown core.
